This Microsoft antitrust scam has gone on long enough.

The only parties hurt by Microsoft has been their incompetent competitors. They want the government to, in some way, hobble Microsoft since they can't compete in a COMPETITIVE marketplace. I don't think Time/AOL, Sun, Oracle and the rest care about the consumer one bit. The rogue states continuing the campaign either want some sort of recognition or are trying to protect Microsoft competitors located in their state.

It is unbelievable that anyone could consider the consumer harmed by almost any of Microsoft's products or services? A free browser; standardization; an easy to use operating system; an excellent office product, etc. etc. etc. If Microsoft doesn't offer products/services customers want, they will buy it from someone else. Let the market decide not a group of zealous attorney's.

Thanks,

(It's also curious to note that the NASDAQ meltdown began shortly after the Clinton Whitehouse began this whole effort.)
